9 Classroom-Tested Ways to Teach the New MLA Style

Need help teaching the eighth edition of the MLA Handbook? Visit the Teaching Resources section of The MLA Style Center for nine lesson plans, including worksheets and sample assignments, from our team of master teachers. Start planning your spring syllabus today!

Commonsense URLs

Quiz: There, Their, There
Are long URLs making your works-cited list unreadable? Read about when to truncate Web addresses and get practical tips on how to do so.
[Find out more.]

Test your knowledge of the homophones there, their, and they’re by taking our quick quiz and get explanations from the MLA editors.
[Find out more.]

The Elegance of Simplicity

Filler phrases add bulk to your sentences without adding meaning. An MLA editor identifies common culprits and presents the case for simplicity.
[Find out more.]

Solar System

If you need more guidance than the dictionary offers to figure out whether to capitalize sun, moon, and earth, our editors are here to help!
[Find out more.]

Anxious about Annotations?

Compiling an annotated bibliography? Teaching students how to create one? Should you use fragments or sentences? We’ve got advice.
[Find out more.]

Critique versus Criticize

Does the distinction between the words critique and criticize matter in academic writing? An MLA editor thinks it does.
[Find out more.]

Picture-Perfect Citations

What information do you need to include when you’re citing an image, and does it matter where you saw it? Readers asked, and our editors answered.
[Find out more.]

See You at NCTE!

Visit us at the NCTE convention (18–20 November). We’ll give out fifty free copies of the MLA Handbook each day, and you can enter to win some for your class!